Joseph Brooks, William H. Crane's manager, has been dailying with managerial pursuits for twenty years, and during that time he has accumulated a list of stars that can scarcely be beaten. In spite of the well-known fact that stellar ladies and gentlemen are proverbially capricious, Mr. Brooks is not a bit cynical, or soured, or gray-haired, or old-looking. Think of a man having been able to keep his equanimity and a dapper, youtyful appearance after having managed provides the control of the con

The present contract between Messrs. Gilmore and Frohman for the production of "The Girl I Left Behind Me." David Belasco and Franklin Fyles's play, at the Academy of Music, may lead to other things. In case of success Mr. Frohman may put other of his plays on the large and well-regulated stage of the Academy. It is a long time since the Academy has had anything so good on view as "The Girl I Left Behind Me."

Fanny Davenport wants to give up matinee performances. She hates them, the has resolutely refused to give any vednesday matinees—having a special lause in all her contracts to that effect and now she longs to get Saturday fternoons free. Of course, this sounds ery artistic, but it isn't necessarily so, arah Bernhardt would appear three limes a day, if there were "money in it," and she is perhaps the best example of "genuine artist" that is known to-day.

A unique possibility of theatrical commerce eropped up in Plainfield the other day. The burning of the Globe Theatre, Boston, forced "Blue Jeans" to a night's presentation in the borough, and as the price asked by the transfer man favored by the theatre for the carriage of scenery and baggage to and from the theatre was higher than the tariff in any part of the country Managers Rosenquest and Arthur endenvored to sequented the condition that the only entrance to the stage of the Music Hall is at the end of a lane running through the yard of a candy factory, adjoining the rear of the hall. The transfer man, whose name is Bailey, has a regularly executed legal document granting him the exclusive right "to push, drive or otherwise propel" vehicles through this lane. Of course "Blue Jeans" had to accept his services. Bailey should go into Wall street.

The Cornell Sun makes this comment on some of the candidates for the Pennsylvania crew: "J. Wagenhorst, who never, during the whole of last season, succeeded in getting his oar into the water and bringing it out again without considerable disturbance, seemed to get the knack of rowing smoothly during the first five minutes he was in the tank this year. Beck has been trying to cure his old habit of flapping his elbows like a pair of wings when he slips his oars out of the water, and has shown a marked improvement in this respect. Otto Wagenhorst has always had a habit of bringing his body forward too soon on the recover; the few days he has been training this year have improved him wonderfully. Marshall, too, has shown improvement over his last year's work. Hollingshead is just beginning to know how he ought to row. During the last two or three days he has made more improvement than almost any other man.

members of the Society expect the ball to be the most successful they have ever held.

Like all the adjuncts of the Arion ball, the general public ticket is very handsome this year, and contains a humorous hit. On one side Diana is represented in a way not to offend the most fastidious. As a butterfly, with outspread wings, the goddess is pictured daintily picking her way over the world and gently kicking against the tower of the Madison Square Garden. In one hand she holds a pipe and bowl filled with soap bubbles, and in the other an open fan. Behind her is the full moon, and in the sky a number of faces resembling those of well-known individuals and some brilliant stars are slyly peeping at her. The reverse side represents the landing of Arion and his meeting with Prince Carnival and Princess Columbine. The ball will begin to-night at 9 o'clock, and the procession takes place shortly afterwards.
